10. Case Study Based Question:

There was a small school in the North eastern state of India. There were two classes running in school, one before lunch break and another after break. First class was for descriptive education and second for student activities such as games and other.

One student (a boy nearly 6 years old) always used to go to school after the break. Teachers noticed this for a few days and then enquired the boy but he didn't answer anything. Later that boy was scolded as well as beaten up also for not coming on time but the boy didn't give any answer to them. Further, the situation goes to higher authority and they decided to search on the cause. They sent a person to check, a person reached his house and finds that there was an old lady (boy's grandmother) seemingly too much old and weak whom the boy used to help in cooking, getting ready and other household works before going to school. The school officials were informed about the situation before the boy reached the school....

Here is a pause in the story.

Now, according to you, who is at fault? Imagine if you were the teacher at that school what will be your next move. Express your views. Give five different possibilities which you can do at that time for the sake of betterment of situation.
